

ROSE O'NEILL LITERARY HOUSE

The Rose O'Neill Literary House stands at the center of Washington College's thriving literary community. Some of the nation's most distinguished writers, editors, and thinkers have given readings and broken bread with WC students on the Literary House's wraparound porch or within its poster-clad Victorian walls.

In the state-of-the-art Printshop, students learn antique and new technologies of publishing: from setting type and binding books to desktop publishing software.

The Rose O'Neill Literary House is a physical space where students, regardless of major, can find community. And it is a programmatic space committed to promoting the articulated word and its transformative power.